(And another one...)

FYI: THE DISCUSSION HERE HAS MOVED AWAY FROM ANALYZING IMAGES AND MAPS OF THE FK'N DAM!
Forgive this retard for yelling, however this is now bread ~#33 and it's incredible how people literally think the folks here would spend 33 breads talking about pictures of a dam.

This video below explains why -- and how -- the Chicoms literally distort maps of China. The image attached to this post is a screen capture from the video.

https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=L9Di-UVC-_4&feature=youtu.be

SUMMARY OF THE DISCUSSION THUS FAR:
[from last bread]

- China is now facing historic heavy rainfall and floods that are occurring at an early moment prior to the start of their annual flood season. The scale of the heavy rain and flooding can reasonably be said to be affecting roughly ~3/4 of the Yangtze River region. The reason why the Yangtze River region is significant, is because this river is what flows into, and through, the 3GD. Considering the current geopolitical tensions, the effects of these heavy rains and floods are likely to have a negative impact on China's economic and agricultural output and may even threaten the CCP's hold on power. In fact, recent information slowly emerging from China suggests this event will bring serious implications for the Chicoms, regardless of whether or not the Three Gorges Dam (3GD) experiences structural damage. So far information has been shared which both reports on, and shows evidence of, property and agricultural damage on a massive scale. The most important factor to remember here, is that all of these events are occurring at the start of their annual flood season (which runs from July-August), and even without the 3GD suffering from structural damage. Finally, to make this discussion even more interesting, Wuhan just reported a red alert rain warning. Since Wuhan is located downstream from the 3GD, it's plausible Wuhan will soon be flooded.

Thank you for lending your time with this matter.

Violet is two hours ago, green is the current shape of the storm. Based on its direction and speed, I estimate the edge of the storm will hit the dam in about 8 hours, and its heart will sit directly above the dam in about 16.

That means that it'll be right about noon on the dot local time that the edge hits, rain right at the dam site until about 8PM, and then four hours of the worst storms until midnight. It'll be dark and dreary and any work crews trying to make decisions or perform repairs will have limited visibility.

By that point the floor waters running along the river will be in full swing, so if that's not the critical moment then this is probably a bust.

Things will quiet down and The CCP will get the Three Gorges Dam back under control again, because they know it is a vulnerability to their regime and we are watching it. They'll prevent it to demoralize you.

But because God is God and the mandate of heaven is lost, God Himself will destroy the dam and by supernatural means the whole WORLD will witness, and China will be brought under submission and cry for and be forced to accept air flown help from a United States and World they tried with satan to destroy. God will not be mocked, even in Chinese.

Here is some footage from the Guilin City flood posted on June 10, 2020.
Note that this video was posted on June 10th and we're now at June 26th yet the heavy rain continues and the flood reports continue. Additionally, the annual flood period is apparently one week away, and lasts from July-August. Furthermore, according to the latest reports, Wuhan might be the next major city affected by floods, and Chongqing (a city of ~30 million people), might be hit, again! How much of China is really flooded? How long can the Chinese people tolerate these floods? The magnitude of this event just continues to grow. How can the Chicoms just push this aside? One would think that the combined social pressure from the coronavirus and now these floods being only 6 months apart, will eventually burst.

[start blogpost]
Now that amateur footage from within the various floodzones is becoming more visible, it seems like a decent moment to acknowledge that absorbing it all is rather heartbreaking because the people negatively affected are mostly innocent peasants suffering due to Chicom hubris and willful incompetence, which is a deadly combination. Truly hope that the innocent people find safe, high, and dry ground, and that this rain and these floods are enough to rally the Chinese people against the CCP monster.
[end blogpost]

The first third of the dam was built incorrectly by the PLA, no rebar welds, they kept that section.
The dam sits on the riverbed, not set down in it.

It is now advertised as good for a once-in-100 year flood which is about what we have right now.

At the dam opening ceremony in. 2007, all the top communists were no-shows, probably because they didn't want their names associated with the dam as they saw failure as real risk.

See the attached image for Yangtze River dams upstream from the 3GD. An anon from a previous bread mentioned not all of these dams have been built. Also, this does not account for all of the dams that may be located along the numerous tributaries that flow into the Yangtze River, both from the north and the south, and both from upstream and downstream from the 3GD.

CROSS ROADS
Concerns Over the Three Gorges Dam Grow, as China Begins Censoring News of the Floods

Anonymous ID:YkwaIX/Q Fri 26 Jun 2020 13:55:48 No.265017709 Report

Quoted By: >>265017966

The Three Gorges Dam in China has become a center of attention, as waters rise and local authorities issue flood warnings nearby. Taiwan News reports that a prominent Chinese hydrologist, Wang Weiluo, is claiming the dam “could collapse at any moment.” He pointed to existing concerns over the dam’s design, construction, and process for inspections.

Chinese authorities, meanwhile, are declaring that information on the flood in Chongqing is “sensitive information,” which subjects it to censorship. The floods havee already hit 26 provinces, required emergency rescue of over 213,000 people, and damaged over 171,000 homes. The situation may grow worse as the 980 reservoirs are impacted >why would a broken dam cause a huge flood?

Because dams hold a huge amount of water, that's what they're designed to do. China already had a dam break in 1975 that killed at least 80,000 people.
https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/1975_Banqiao_Dam_failure

If the Three Gorges Dam broke and the reservoir drained in a day, it would be 15 times as much water as the Yangtze river flows at its peak.

>I don't remember China being flooded before it was built.
https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/List_of_natural_disasters_by_death_toll#Ten_deadliest_floods Top four are all China.

Interesting, checked out that tweet and read a few others. Then, found the article which has been screen capped and attached to this post, and also linked below.

Article from ZeroHedge, dated June 24, 2020:
>As 3 US Carriers Patrol Western Pacific, Chinese Analysts Warn US-China Stumbling Toward War
https://www.zerohedge.com/geopolitical/3-us-carriers-patrol-western-pacific-chinese-analysts-warn-us-china-stumbling-toward

What are the odds that the more damage these heavy rains and historic floods cause (both in an economic and agricultural context), the more unhinged, bellicose, and aggressive the Chicoms become, within a geopolitical context? It's likely -- and becoming more likely with each new bread -- that the Chicoms perceive the current historic flood scenario as a national security threat. It's fascinating how these water events -- in the sense that they're occurring "naturally" -- may literally become a trigger for geopolitical conflict.

Unfinished Multi-Million Dollar Bridge Swept Away by Flood in China

Anonymous ID:YkwaIX/Q Fri 26 Jun 2020 14:06:32 No.265019214 🇺🇸 Report

https://www.theepochtimes.com/mkt_app/unfinished-multi-million-dollar-bridge-swept-away-by-flood-in-china_3400787.html?v=ul

Several days of rainstorms have caused severe flooding and a massive mudslide in Sichuan province. A bridge that was under construction in Pingchang county—located in the northeastern Sichuan province—succumbed to the rising flood and was quickly washed away.

According to Chinese state media, the local government invested 140 million yuan ($19.8 million) in the construction of the bridge, which began on July 2, 2019. The bridge would have been 350 meters (0.2 miles) long and 13 meters (43 feet) wide upon completion.

It almost doesn't matter how long it takes to fill, what matters is who has their finger on the button marked "Release".

If the water storage capacity gets close to an expected or anticipated failure point, they could let water through more quickly, however that would result in flooding downstream. According to some reports they've already done so and the results were devastating to the people caught in the path of the water.

What you want to look at is the rate of flow and how that's impacting things, not the storage capacity. The storage capacity tells you how big a problem it'll be if it fails, you want to watch the rate to see when people get antsy about preserving the dam over the lives of the people that the dam is, at least in the interim, protecting. It won't be quite as bad as it all giving out at once, but if some patriot decides that saving face is more important than human life and opens the gates...

Then we don't get a broken dam, but we do get a broken China.

With the articles appearing now documenting various financial totals in relation to property damage caused by the floods, one might be inclined to collect these totals into a spreadsheet in order to provide a cursory overview of the cumulative financial loss these floods are causing. Heck,an anon in a previous bread already shared a report indicating the destruction of 800,000 hectares of agricultural land. And that was just one part of one flood in one region, with still two more months of heavy rain and potential flooding to consider.

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Banqiao_Dam
>The total capacity of the reservoir was 492 million m3 (398,000 acre feet), with 375 million m3 (304,000 acre feet) reserved for flood storage.

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/1975_Banqiao_Dam_failure
>The runoff of Banqiao Dam was 13,000 m3 per second in vs. 78,800 m3 per second out, and as a result 701 million m3 of water were released in 6 hours >supernatural means

Keep in mind that supernatural doesn't mean spectacular. It could be as small as one of the workers getting a flat and being late for his shift. I'm not expecting giant lightning bolts

It will be nice when the CCP stop posting here for a while. I hope they all get washed away by the water of the gods.

White farmers were bullied out of africa by fellow whites and didn't get any support from their fellow whites in white countries.
Don't think Chinese have this problem.
